City Council Approves Change In Parade Route

PORTERVILLE - A change in the Porterville fair parade route, set for Saturday, May 20 at 10:00 a.m., received approval of the Porterville city council Tuesday evening.

The change was necessitated due to the new layer of asphalt on Main street, which city engineers felt wouldn't be hardened enough to withstand the weight of the numerous horses and steel-wheeled wagons to be involved in the parade.

The new route begins with an assembly area on the north end of Main, with staging on Doris and North streets. It will proceed on Main southward as far as Morton, then turn east on Morton to Second street.

The parade will continue on Second to Olive street, and disperse on the corner of C street and Vine.

Petition Asks Recall Of Roy Hartley

SPRINGVILLE - A petition seeking an election for recall of Roy Hartley as a director of the Springville Public Utility district has been found by County Clerk Jay Bayless to be sufficient, with 109 of the 113 names on the petition checking out as those of legally registered voters within the district.

Bayless says that 214 qualified voters resided in the district as of the last election. Since 10 percent of these voters can demand a recall election, only 22 signatures would have been necessary.

Under procedures set forth in the political code, the circulated petitions asking for the recall were filed with the Tulare County Clerk; the clerk was then obligated to determine the validity of signatures and certify the number within 10 days; the petition and the county clerk's certification must then be mailed back to the Springville Public Utility District board, which "shall forthwith" call an election, with date set no sooner than 80 days and no later than 125 days.

With May 4 the deadline for mailing the certified petition by the county clerk, the Springville board should receive it prior to the next meeting - which is Monday night, May 8.

Actually, the three-member board, as of now, has only two members, Hartley and Denise Martin, and no president, since Board President Lee Bledsoe resigned at a meeting last Monday night.

Bledsoe's resignation left Vice President Hartley in the position of president, which meant that the position of board secretary

CHRISTENSEN WILL FILL AG DIRECTOR POST

SACRAMENTO - Charles Brunel Christensen, Modoc county cattleman, was named director of the state department of agriculture last week by Governor Ronald Reagan.

Christensen, a member of the state board of agriculture, succeeds the late Jerry Fielder who was killed March 22 when his light plane crashed near Sacramento. Christensen's appointment is subject to senate confirmation.

LOOK OUT FOR TELEPHONE TALK

Smooth-voiced telephone solicitations are being made in the community for Porterville Fair advertising in the Golden West Farm News. This is an out-of-town publication operating from a temporary telephone connection; there is no tie-in with the Porterville fair. Give that smooth voice a loud "No," and hang up. Your local media will be around for 365 days a year, not for only the few days necessary to skim off some advertising cream at expense of the business community.

SPORTSMEN'S BARBECUE FEATURES ENTERTAINMENT AND DOOR PRIZES

Included among the more than 100 donated prizes are guns, fishing poles, sports items, a half beef, trade certificates, and household items. Others on the prize committee are Harold Cobbs and Dick Peterson. (Farm Tribune photo)

FARMING BY SECTION, NOT ACRE, ON RECLAIMED DESERT LAND

Variety Of Crops Grown

By Bill Rodgers

Desert land along the west side of the southern San Joaquin valley that has traditionally supported little more than sagebrush (and oil wells) is now being farmed not by the acre but by the section, with trees, row crops, vines, forage crops, and truck crops "making the desert bloom."

Catalyst is water from the West Side aqueduct of the California Water project - water that in Kern county alone has turned 190 sections of old desert into new, cultivated farm land.

With a similar pattern developing in Kings county and in other areas further north, this modern land boom has the potential to create a new economic concept for many farm commodities produced in the San Joaquin valley - and in California.

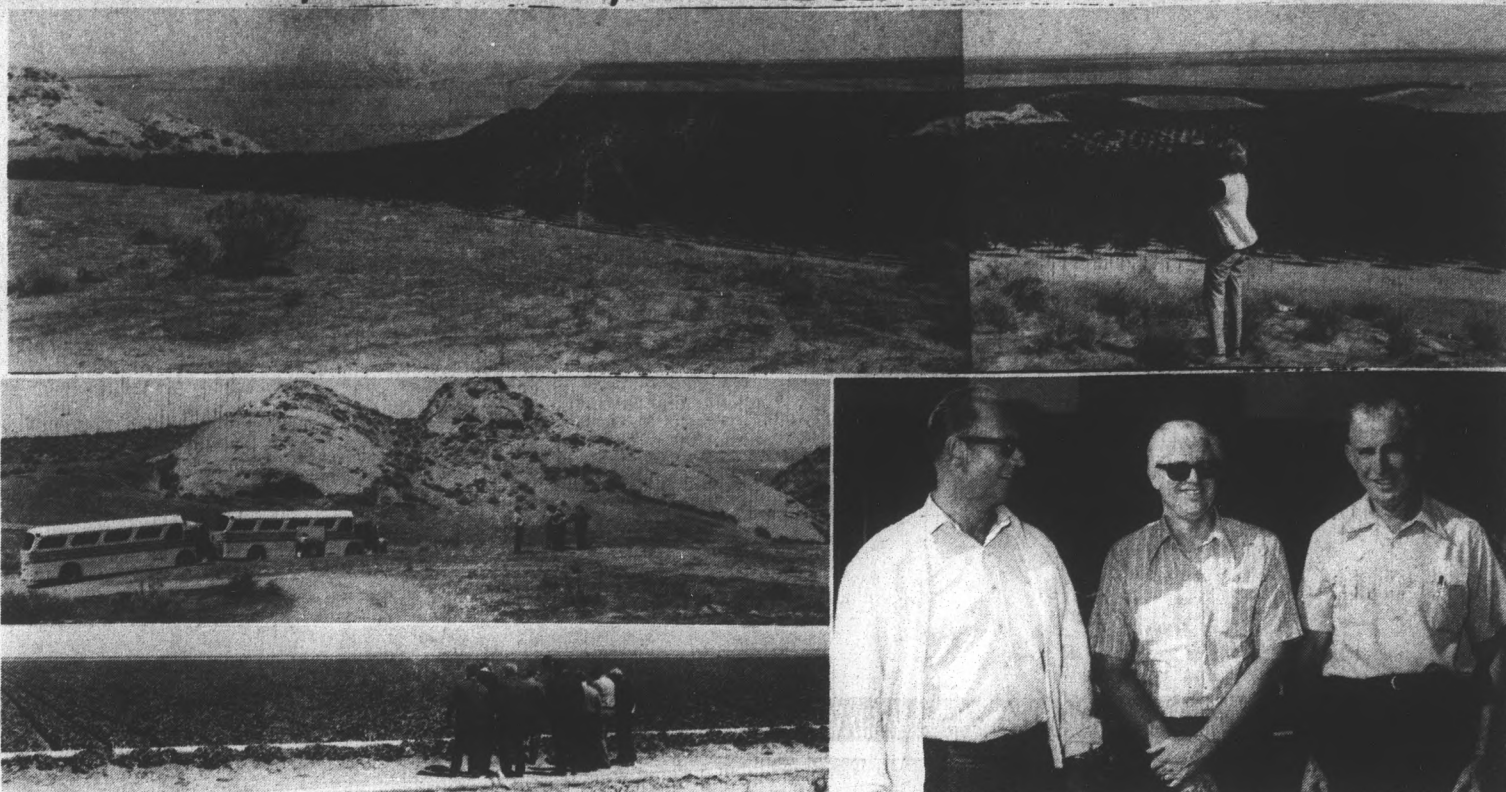

Great as this new development is, it may be only a forerunner of things to come, for more sections of desert land remain to be reclaimed when additional water becomes available - as it most certainly will in the years ahead.

During a recent, all-day, two-bus tour of this new farming area, sponsored by the Citrus Men's club, section after section of new tree plantings were seen - almonds, pistachio nuts, and olives, plus both Navel and Valencia oranges.

In fact virtually every crop grown in the old, established farming areas of the San Joaquin valley, is flourishing in this former desert: Alfalfa, sugar beets, lettuce, barley, peaches, (one 400-acre block of clings was referred to by a ranch representative as a "little planting") plums, nectarines, apricots, persimmons, potatoes, cotton, sugar beets, carrots, broccoli, wine grapes and table grapes.

Some of these crops are being produced on an experimental basis and have not yet proved themselves, for instance a 90-acre planting of walnuts was referred to as a "test plot."

As in all farming areas, there are problems that must be overcome: Strong winds, subsidence of the deep soil that has broken up irrigation district canals, and concentration of boron in some areas.

COMPOSITE PICTURE, top, gives an idea of how south San Joaquin valley desert is being turned into productive farm land - by the section; lower, typical desert land, and a lettuce field near Blackwell's Corner; officers of the Citrus Men's club who conducted

To meet this latter problem, extensive soil maps have been prepared and heavy boron areas are either "planted around" or are set to boron-tolerant crops such as olives and pistachios; developers are learning to live with the wind, and better techniques are now being used in canal construction.

Actually, the Lost Hills and Blackwell Corner country has never offered much attraction for human habitants, remote as it is and isolated from population centers.

Isolation and remoteness are now factors from a personnel standpoint, and to offset them, ranch headquarters and living facilities are new, modern, and from casual observation, almost plush.

But there are no towns, no agri-business, no processing facilities, none of the community developments that go with long-established agricultural areas.

And because of the nature of this new agriculture - big ranches, big units - community-type development may not follow traditional patterns. But as the expansive new acreages come into production, necessary facilities will have to be constructed someplace.

Several prevalent themes run through conversations with ranch representatives: New acreages are being designed for mechanical harvesting whenever possible, and irrigation systems - of which there are various examples - are designed to provide maximum efficiency in water use.

And there seems to be a feeling that mechanical harvesting and crop processing will not be handled by ranch interests, but will likely be done on a contract basis, which may well open a door for future, new agri-business enterprises.

As for farming costs and production, water is $20 an acre foot at the aqueduct; vegetables are being produced on a high quality, "bumper crop" basis; cotton is making three bales on some land but less than one bale on other land; tree crops and vines have not really come into production as yet, but growth appears to be excellent.

And there is the matter of capital investment and development costs which represent big money. For instance, one ranch of 24,000 acres now has 16,000 acres under cultivation, with 6,000 of that acreage in trees and with another 2,000 or 3,000 acres of trees to be set out in the near future.

"Of course we can't farm it all," said a ranch representative. "We have to leave a couple of thousand acres for oil wells."

Impression gained from comments by ranch representatives - invariably sharp young men with solid agricultural backgrounds and education - is that this new agriculture is a serious venture with a profit motive in mind.

"We can grow almost anything on this land," one of these men said, "and we're going to do it. We're not in business to run out the little guy or anyone else. We're developing land and producing crops. We're doing it not as a tax write-off but, in the final analysis, to make money in a competitive market."

Be that as it may, potential impact of this type of farming, as well as the big, big-scale farm operations developed over the past several years in southern Tulare county and northern Kern county, is obvious, and the question often asked is, "Can the traditionally smaller, family-owned and operated farm compete against the tremendously large corporate farm?"

Knowledgeable persons have offered many and varied answers to this question, but one thing is certain: Every operator of a so-called "family farm" should personally take a look at what is happening on the southern San Joaquin valley desert, for like it or not, compete or not, this is where the farm action is.

And it's big action, illustrated by an offhand comment of a foreman who got aboard a bus at a ranch headquarters to describe ranch operations. After driving several miles between blocks of new trees and row crops on each side of the road, this foreman, who was in charge of one particular section of the ranch, said, "you know, I've worked here two years and this is the furthest out I've ever been."

FRONTAL ASSAULT ON COMSTOCK MEALYBUG CONTINUES IN PORTERVILLE-LINDSAY AREA

PORTERVILLE — State and county entomologists and farm advisors are continuing with a three-front assault on the Comstock mealybug in the Porterville-Lindsay area, using chemical applications of dimethoate on street trees and shrubbery, and one of the mealybugs natural predators, the Cryptolaemus beetle on off-street hosts.

The third part of the control program involves survey crews continually checking controlled areas for new infestations, and inspecting infestations that have already been treated either chemically or biologically to record the effectiveness of the treatment. Generally, an infested tree will be treated three times at one or two month intervals.

With each treatment, the entomologists have found that the mealybug infestation is reduced 95 percent. The first chemical or biological application, then, leaves only five percent of the original mass; second application destroys 95 percent of the remaining five percent; and the third application will destroy any eggs or larvae that manage to beat these odds.

To date, over 500,000 beetles have been released. Jerry Smith, state department of agriculture entomologist, stated that an additional four million beetles will be released during the summer.

The mealybug's real threat to the San Joaquin valley is not so much its attack on mulberry trees and other ornamental plants, but if left unchecked, the infestation will spread to citrus groves and other valley crops. If this were allowed to happen, said Smith, growers would begin to notice valuable trees dying almost overnight.

So far, he said, mealybugs have been found on only a few citrus trees. These have been treated immediately, but growers are required to take the responsibility of preventive spraying in the rest of their groves and orchards.

Smith said that growers and property owners are always consulted before the state-county team begins spraying or releasing beetles. He said cooperation has been very good once the problem is explained.

Ants have proven to be a problem to the effectiveness of the biological control program, Smith stated. They are fond of the honeydew produced by mealybugs, and will attack the Crypts beetles and almost any other natural predator in order to protect this food source.

Work teams have therefore found it necessary to spray the bases of infested trees with ant repellent.

The program will probably continue through 1977, Smith said. Use of chemicals will be cut down increasingly when the control team decides biological control can be equally effective.

Total cost of the program is estimated at $197,000. This includes approximately $85,000 for University of California research in developing other natural predators. The Crypts beetles are native to Australia, and have so far been unable to survive California winters in effective numbers, making new releases necessary each spring.

Once the known infestations are under control, all of Tulare county will be surveyed as a precautionary measure.

COORDINATING EFFORTS of both the state and county in eradication of Comstock mealybug in Tulare county are, from left: Dick Swalm and Frank Stegmiller, economic entomologists for the California Department of Agriculture; Bob Bonds, Tulare county agricultural inspector; and Jerry Smith, state entomologist and field coordinator of both chemical and biological control programs currently being used in the Porterville-Lindsay-Strathmore-Terra Bella areas. (Farm Tribune photos)

ERADICATION OF the Comstock mealybug is the goal of the state and county program in the Lindsay, Strathmore, and Terra Bella areas, largely through chemical application sprayed on infested trees. Biological control is being used more extensively in the Porterville area for suppression where infestation is heaviest. Second photo from

CUMMINGS PROMOTED TO REAR ADMIRAL

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Ward Cummings, son of Charles Cummings of Porterville, is among 50 Navy captains recently nominated by President Nixon and promoted to the rank of U.S. Navy rear admiral.

We Only Heard

BY BILL RODGERS

WHEN VOTERS, by less than one percent said "No" in last February's Elementary School bond election, the problem of what to do about buildings in the Porterville system that do not comply with Field Act specifications was not solved. It was only postponed. But by the end of June, 1975, state law says these buildings can no longer be used by school children, which means they must be abandoned in so far as student use is concerned, or replaced. If they are abandoned, then a new problem pops up - where do school administrators put the children? If they are replaced, where does the money come from, about $572,000 worth of money, according to estimates prepared for the February bond issue. . . . As we say, the "No" vote solved nothing, the problem is there and becoming more acute as the deadline use-date approaches. . . . So what! . . . Well, we know that school board members and school administrators are concerned; we think that others in the community are also concerned and more would be if the facts of the case were again adequately presented to the public. So, we suggest that the Citizen's Master Plan Advisory Committee be revitalized by dropping those members who seem to have lost interest, by replacing them with business and professional people, and farmers, who do have an interest, and by enlarging the committee with concerned workers. . . . This can be done, in fact something of this nature must be done, because the problem of sub-standard Field Act buildings will not fade away and will not be solved by a head-in-the-sand approach and by "No" votes. . . . Any volunteers for the Citizen's committee? Check with Dick Schafer or John Ralphs.

GRAIN CROPS SUFFERING LOW RAINFALL

VISALIA - Dryland small grain crops continue to suffer the effects of low rainfall in Tulare county according to Elvin Mankins, agricultural commissioner.

Hay is being cut in most areas and livestock turned in to the stubble, Mankins said. Cotton crops are getting a growth boost from recent warmer temperatures.

Sugar beet crop looks good for this year. Grape crop is developing well, although yield will be down from previous years due to frost and light crop in general.

Some thinning is still going on in peach and plum orchards. Navel harvest is nearing 75 percent completion, with continued heavy grade-out due to frost and granulation.

Vegetable growers continue the work of polling, stringing, cultivating, and irrigating fields.

Cattlemen are reducing herds to a minimum for summer due to lack of rangeland grass.

Lamb production totaled approximately 12.9 million last year according to USDA officials.

that Hartley had been filling was temporarily taken over by Giles Chapin, bookkeeper for the district.

At a meeting in April, Hartley and Bledsoe had relieved Mrs. Martin of her position as board secretary when she refused to sign a certified copy of a resolution she had voted against, a resolution authorizing annexation into the utility district of a proposed 150-site mobile home court.

At a meeting in March, Bledsoe, who had, with Mrs. Martin, opposed the annexation, shifted his position and joined Hartley who favored the annexation. The annexation resolution then carried.

At present, the annexation is "in the mill" with the Local Agency Formation Commission.

As for the Springville Public Utility District board, there seems to be no indication that the two remaining members will immediately appoint a third member, as they have the power to do, to replace Bledsoe.

At the Monday night meeting, Hartley suggested naming Jay Williams, who was second runnerup for a board position in an election last November; Mrs. Martin suggested that Dr. Cecil Gavel be appointed.

Hartley suggested a straw vote among users of Utility district services, provided agreement was first reached that both directors would accept results of the straw vote, which he said he would do.

However, no firm commitment or plan of action was agreed upon.

Split in the utility district board - and among residents of Springville as well - has been developing for about a year, after it was learned that owners of the proposed mobile home subdivision were seeking annexation of the property.

Utility board, and community, controversy centers around whether or not the district has the necessary water, and sewage facilities, to supply the proposed subdivision; a feeling among some persons that better service should be provided within the existing district before expansion is approved; and whether or not, under projected development plans, the district can afford the annexation.

The board will meet Monday night in an executive session to discuss work rules and conditions with employees of the district. This session will be followed by a public meeting.

COUNTY'S SENIOR CITIZENS TO BE HONORED TODAY

VISALIA - Tulare County Senior Citizen day will be celebrated today, May 4, at an all-day event in Visalia's new Community and Convention center starting at 10:00 a.m.

Scheduled for the day are: displays and demonstrations by Senior Citizens group, a potluck luncheon at noon, followed by a talent show with members of various clubs performing. Highlighting the day will be presentations of awards to outstanding individuals and awards honoring the oldest persons, longest-time county resident, and longest married couple.

A special poetic tribute will be paid by Tulare county poet laureate E.R. Connelly. Master of ceremonies will be the Reverend H. George Vorsheim.

Those persons receiving awards will be honored at a Tri-County Senior Citizens day at the Hanford Civic auditorium on May 25.

RAMOS WILL SERVE TBID

TERRA BELLA - Carl Ramos of Terra Bella was recently appointed by the Tulare county board of supervisors to fill the unexpired term of director of the board of Terra Bella Irrigation district, left vacant last month by the death of W.D. Fowler. According to Ernest Taylor, TBID secretary, the term of director will continue until December, 1973.

MECHA CLUB PICNIC, DANCE
